

WOMAN'S VARIED INTERESTS

CHURCH PARADE GOWNS.

Sunday Costumes for the Beach at Fashionable Resorts May Be Elaborate and Show the Touch of the Best Artists to Advantage.

CUSTOM has made the Hyde Park church parade a recognized institution of London. It has also granted recognition to the bathing beach after morning service at fashionable seaside resorts in America. Of course everybody is rather elaborately garbed, because gowns and hats far too striking for street use in town are charming looking in rural surroundings. Not that any one dresses for morning service with the idea of parading that costume on the beach at noon. But as one is going there to meet friends—and probably a few strangers—it is nice to feel that one is looking one's best. Incidentally, if the gown and hat and accessories are beyond criticism and bear the brand of Paris's best artists in feminine finery so much the better.

Ultra-smart yet sufficiently subdued to suit the taste of the strictly conventional—such persons are to be encountered at every fashionable resort—is a young matron's costume in tête de negre charmeuse and tulle. Self-toned velvet ribbon bands the filmy tunic and, defining the richu fronts of the bodice, drops into sash ends from the waistline's back. From under the narrow cuffs on its elbow sleeves run mousquetaire heli-sleeves of tulle which modestly cover the wrists. White shows only on a broad collar in linen. A-jour hemmed, for the slippers are in bronze kid and bronze leaves trim the hat, whose narrow brim is drawn toward the ears with ribbons tying under the chin.

Two Effective Costumes.

Two shades of gray are employed to develop the church gown of a brown-eyed matron now at Bar Harbor. Straight to the ankles falls its silk overdress, which is attached to its hand in widely separated clusters of tiny plaits. There is no girle between the skirt and the bodice, whose lower half forms a closely fitted waistcoat double-breasted and buttoning far toward the right side. Taffeta is used for the narrow elbow sleeves and the upper half of the bodice, whose fronts, finished with a turned-over collar and revers in embroidered maline, open over a vestee in folded linen.

Quakerish of hue but not of cut is the church costume worn recently by the guest of the gray-clad young matron. Underdress, overskirt and jacket are in puce satin, relieved by a belt in black satin ribbon fastened under a cluster of eight-inch long loops. These loops show below the replum of a jacket which is very short at the back but has fronts lengthened into long ends crossed, brought low over the hips and at the back of the overskirt—holding flat buttons are continued down the skirt to the hips, where a knee-length ruffle is applied under a cording. But at the waistline they are interrupted by a rose-colored soft silk girdle tied in wide short loops and fringe-bordered ends at the back.

With this model—which one of the girls had ordered in the shade originally made up—was worn a rose crepe-covered hat trimmed with a big bow. The other frock, in mauve its fulness—run through a large oval self-covered buckle.

A Confusion of Fashions.

To the dismay of their wearers and the secret amusement of their acquaintances, two copies of one model were worn on a recent Sunday at Narragansett. Both girls had been to church, and side by side they walked from its doors toward the bathing beach. Fortunately these two frocks were in different colors. Moreover the original model was so appealing it is small wonder that two girls of the same set, shopping in Paris, should have fancied it.

Its long and narrow sleeved bodice in blue taffeta is plain save for the row of small self-covered buttons closing its semi-fitted fronts. These silk was girdled with a sash in palest lavender.

White, always attractive, makes a type of church costume which blends harmoniously with whatever colors may be worn by occupants of neighboring pews or the beach strollers with whom one may by chance touch elbows.

A Titian-haired matron who lives at Newport almost invariably appears at church in a white costume. Sometimes it is a tailored linen suit with crisp collar and cuffs. Again it is a taffeta. Or, if the weather is torrid, a chiffon.

White from the hat crowning her gleaming head to the tips of her suede slippers, she makes a picture well worth looking at.

A new French concept is this cape worn of white tulle. The cape back is secured to the simple front by a large black button at either side. The back collar has a similar simulated buttoning.

Levis combines in this model clouds and clouds of marabout with a wealth of panache feathers. An almost invisible trim holds up the marabout, and it is secured with black satin to contrast with the softer gray satin of the hat.

SERVING THE SALAD.

The Most Essential Point Is to Have It Crisp and Cold. All of Its Green Ingredients Should Be Edible, and the Leaves Dry.

IN SERVING salads of whatever description remember that one of the most essential things is to have the salad crisp and cold, and slices of sweet red pepper and a dusting of grated egg yolk.

Individual Russian Salads.

Ornament the bottom of small tinbale moulds with bits of boiled carrots cut into fancy shapes and a row of cooked peas around the edge. Add enough clear aspic jelly to set them, and when this is firm fill up the moulds with jelly. Place directly on the ice, and when the contents of the moulds are firm scoop out with a sharp pointed spoon a portion from the centre of each. Fill these spaces with a mixture of diced, cooked vegetables mixed with mayonnaise and serve them inverted on a chilled platter, surrounded with a border of white lettuce leaves. Garnish with quarters of hard boiled eggs and slices of pickled beets.

Green Pea and Veal Salad.

A delicious summer salad is made by cutting one cupful of cold veal into dice. Add one cupful of cold peas and sprinkle the ingredients lightly with salt and white pepper. Moisten with a boiled dressing, flavored with a few mint leaves, and arrange in individual portions in nests of heart lettuce leaves. Mash each portion with a tablespoonful of the dressing and garnish with capers and chopped white of egg.

Watercress Salad.

Sliced finely one large bunch of crisp cress and add in the order mentioned half a pound of flaked crab meat, three chopped hard boiled eggs, a light sprinkling of salt and cayenne and sufficient mayonnaise to moisten. Arrange in a mound on a salad platter, surround with a border of the cress and garnish with sliced stuffed olives and tiny gherkin pickles.

Romaine and Tomato Salad.

Chop finely two cupfuls of crisp romaine, add three peeled tomatoes that have been drained and diced, one tiny slice of minced onion, one chopped dill pickle and a small cupful of cooked tongue cut into dice. Mix the ingredients well and blend with the addition of a boiled dressing. Serve the salad very cold, garnished with parsley and small radishes.

Do You Know?

That an Austrian sauce meant particularly for spring lamb may be a novelty for the American dinner? This is made by melting currant jelly and mixing with it a little mustard in proportion. Perhaps one even teaspoonful to an average size glass of jelly.

That an unusual but worth while lamb sauce is concocted by putting freshly chopped mint in hot water to draw out the flavor. Then to this add just enough orange marmalade to make a thick gravy, and serve it at the same temperature as ordinary mint sauce.

Bathing Costumes.

Caps, Sashes and Slippers of Individuality Seen in Shops.

BATHING suits are prettier this year than ever before. Illustrated on this page is a simple but attractive one of black satin, cut in kimono style. The short sleeves finish with a broad band of black and white striped satin. An attractive feature of this suit is the shawl collar, which extends over the shoulders and goes down to a "V" in front, where it meets a yoke trimmed with the black and white striped satin. The plain peg top skirt is trimmed in the same manner as the sleeves. This suit may be had in either satin or moire for $9.50.

White Cap Trimmed with Flowers and Black Velvet.

Sketched with this suit is a charming cap of white rubberized satin, trimmed with little rubber flowers and black velvet. It has an inner lining, which fits close to the head. A little ruffle in the back gives a pretty effect. Price, $3.50.

Stockings and Slippers.

A good pair of silk stockings that will wear well may be had for $1.50 in any color.

The slippers shown with this suit are of black satin and may be had for $2.25. Wool tights may be bought for $1.75.

Bright Colored Rubber Sashes.

Sashes play an important part in bathing costumes this summer. The rubber sashes are very practical and come in lovely bright colors. These sash belts look very smart with a dark suit and may be bought for $1.95.

Italian Silk Combination.

Combinations to wear under the bathing suits are essential. One of Italian silk is made with low neck and no sleeves, and buttons down the front. It is made with the fulness that the loosely blousing suit demands. These combinations are priced at $4.75. In mercerized jersey, $2.95.
